

Freddy the Fox

One moonlit night Freddy the fox was hiding sneakily behind an old tree thinking about dinner. The tree felt as smooth as slime. Freddy the furry fox was a really evil creature. He killed chickens, goats and pigs and turned them into evil animals. He was dressed in his favourite jacket made of beautiful, lime-green silk and wore a yellow scarf to be warm. In his paw he held a magical, goose-handled umbrella that he used to make evil minions. His two ears were as pointy as swords as they listened for any chickens scratching on the dirty, dusty, brown ground. His eyes were like big raindrops staring and glaring at all of the chickens. His long snout was sniffing their fresh aroma through the windows. His long pink tongue was licking his lips. "Here I come to slobber you all you up little chickens!"
